half explores how Polybius develops his interpretation of the king through ideological and literary means it investigates how Polybius uses cultural politics to blacken Philip's image and justify the exchange of Macedonia and Rome as hegemonic powers in the Greek world it rationalizes his use of a tragic mode for Philip's last years examining the implications this styling has for our historical understanding of the king and it considers how tensions between Polybius narrative and commentary on Philip may be the result of his combination of historiographical and biographical modes of presentation it finishes by resituating Philip in the broader context of the histories drawing comparisons between his portrait and that of other kings and leaders and discussing how kings are shaped by and contribute to the arguments in the histories
